NEW SPYING BY U-2*Calls, in New Hampshire,

DURHAM, N. H., March 3— Senator Barry Goldwater indicated today that he favored a resumption of U-2 and other reconnaissance flights over the Soviet Union.

In reference to the "codes of behavior and morality" that he said candidates should hold, the Arizona Republican appeared to make his first criticism of Governor Rockefeller's divorce and remarriage.

Mr. Goldwater, a candidate in the New Hampshire Republican Presidential primary next Tuesday, went on a hand-shaking tour with his wife, Peggy, and made an unusual promise. He said he would not make any political promises.

The Senator's views on aerial spying were drawn from him by a question from a member of a crowd of about 75 persons in the town of Hudson.

He was asked if he favored using the newly revealed 2,000 mile-an-hour A-11 interceptor airplane for spying on the Soviet Union.

Had Not Heard of Plane

"I think," Mr. Goldwater said, "we should spy on the heart-fands of our enemies in any way we can." "They do it to us," he said. He said he would use "any method at our disposal to gain information on our enemies, whoever they are, and that includes the U-2." Mr. Goldwater said he did not know whether the A-11 would be adaptable to reconnaissance work and that he had not known of the existence of the airplane before it was announced by President Johnson.

Aerial reconnaissance is "very necessary," he contended, because "we are not too sure of target information" on military targets within Soviet boundaries. He said that longitudinal and latitudinal coordinates of possible missile targets might be wrong and that aerial overflights should be used to check the coordinates.

Flights Are Suspended

The U-2 is a high-altitude photo-reconnaissance aircraft said to be capable of reaching heights of 90,000 feet. A U-2 piloted by an employee of the Central Intelligence Agency, Francis Gary Powers, was shot down near Sverdlovsk in 1960 shortly before a scheduled summit conference in Paris. After the incident, Premier Khrushchev broke up the summit conference by demanding unacceptable terms of satisfaction from President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Such flights over the Soviet Union have since been suspended although it is known that Nationalist Chinese pilots from Taiwan have continued to make U-2 flights over the Chinese mainland.

In a speech prepared for a rally at the University of New Hampshire Fieldhouse here, Mr. Goldwater said that "public morality" was an American tradition.

Cites 'Codes of Morality'

"No man," he said, "is perfect and no series of decisions can be expected to be perfect. But you have a right to demand that the men making these decisions at least be dedicated to the same traditions and values that you hold, to the same codes of behavior and morality."

He also spoke of "morality that works on a sliding scale, depending on your position."

Some New Hampshire voters have been critical of Governor Rockefeller's remarriage, but Mr. Goldwater has said in the past that the Governor was morally fit to hold any post. He did not mention the Governor's name tonight.

Mr. Goldwater told his audience at Hudson, "I can promise you that I'm not going to promise you anything." He said he could only promise to give "the best years of my life and the best that is in me."

Earlier in the day he was asked to comment on a front-page letter in the conservative Manchester Union Leader that accused Mr. Rockefeller of evading military service in World War II. Mr. Goldwater deplored such remarks and said, "I wouldn't get to that level."

An Unpredictable Campaign

Mr. Goldwater's constantly unpredictable campaign stayed that way today.

Despite the fact that a decision had been made by his national campaign managers not to schedule any more hand-shaking street tours, he went on one. He did well at this task and many voters wished him luck or promised to work for him.

Mrs. Goldwater, in a red woolen coat, went with him but continued her remarks to such expressions as "How do you do?" Since she has not had the publicity of Mrs. Rockefeller, Mrs. Goldwater is often not recognized by voters.

The Goldwaters' two sons, Barry Jr. and Michael, were also campaigning independently for the Senator elsewhere in the state.

"We don't believe in putting all our Goldwater in one bucket," Mr. Goldwater quipped in explaining their absence.
